Jane Eyre

CHARLOTTE BRONTE

I must keep to my post, however. I must watch this ghastly

I must keep to my post, however. I must watch this ghastly countenance—these blue, still lips forbidden to unclose—these eyes now shut, now opening, now wandering through the room, now fixing on me, and ever glazed with the dulness of horror. I must dip my hand again and again in the basin of blood and water, and wipe away the trickling gore. I must see the light of the unsnuffed candle wane on my employment; the shadows darken on the wrought, antique tapestry round me, and grow black under the hangings of the vast old bed, and quiver strangely over the doors of a great cabinet opposite whose front, divided into twelve panels, bore in grim design the heads of the twelve apostles, each enclosed in its separate panel as in a frame: while above them at the top rose an ebon crucifix and a dying Christ.

According as the shifting obscurity and flickering gleam hovered here or glanced there, it was now the bearded physician Luke, that bent his brow; now St. John's long hair that waved, and anon the devilish face of Judas, that grew out of the panel, and seemed gathering life and threatening a revelation of the arch-traitor—of Satan himself—in his subordinate's form.

Amidst all this, I had to listen as well as watch; to listen for the movements of the wild beast or the fiend in yonder side den. But since Mr. Rochester's visit it seemed spell-bound: all the night I heard but three sounds at three long intervals—a step creak, a momentary renewal of the snarling, canine noise, and a deep human groan.

Then my own thoughts worried me. What crime was this, that lived incarnate in this sequestered mansion, and could neither be expelled nor subdued by the owner? What mystery, that broke out, now in fire and now in blood, at the deadliest hours of night? What creature was it, that, masked in an ordinary woman's face and shape, uttered the voice, now of a mocking demon, and anon of a carrion-seeking bird of prey?

And this man I bent over—this commonplace, quiet stranger—how had he become involved in the web of horror? and why had the Fury flown at him? What made him seek this quarter of the house at an untimely season, when he should have been asleep in bed? I had heard Mr. Rochester assign him an apartment below—what brought him here? And why, now, was he so tame under the violence or treachery done him? Why did he so quietly submit to the concealment Mr. Rochester enforced? Why did Mr. Rochester enforce this concealment? His guest had been outraged, his own life on a former occasion had been hideously plotted against; and both attempts he smothered in secrecy and sank in oblivion! Lastly, I saw Mr. Mason was submissive to Mr. Rochester; that the impetuous will of the latter held complete sway over the inertness of the former: the few words which had passed between them assured me of this.

JANE EYRE - JANE'S BILDUNGSROMAN DEVELOPMENT - TEACHER GUIDANCE

Subject English/ English Literature <hr/> Objectives/Starter Slides 1-2 <hr/> Introduction CH-8 <hr/> Development CH-11 <hr/> Main Task and Plenary CH-18	Overview: This lesson enables students to make clear, detailed and well-informed interpretations of the eponymous title character's development throughout Jane Eyre. In particular, students develop their background understanding of how Jane's character is introduced, before plotting her development against the different stages of protagonists in Bildungsroman novels. <hr/> The teacher introduces students to the lesson topic and learning objective. The starter task requires students to complete the 'think, pair, share' activity. In this task, they discuss the meaning of the word 'Bildungsroman Novel', using the literal translation from German as an example. They also consider some other examples of Bildungsroman texts. Notes to aid the discussion are provided on slide 2. <hr/> After a brief introduction to stage 1 of Bildungsroman novels (the protagonist experiences loss/hardship), the students are then given an extract to read, (from chapter 1) which has been selected as it clearly demonstrates Jane's position at stage 1 on the Bildungsroman journey. Students identify the key features of the stage in the text, by annotating in the colour key provided on slide 4. The students then answer the comprehension questions on slide 5, suggested answers to which are provided on the next few slides (6-8). <hr/> This stage of the lesson introduces students to the subsequent stages of the typical Bildungsroman novel. These are described in depth on slides 9-12. As a development task, students then link their understanding of these different stages to Jane's development in Jane Eyre. They should back up their ideas with textual evidence and full explanations. For example, stage 1 would be her outcast position in the Reed home, stage 2 her first day at school, etc. <hr/> For the main task, students apply their understanding of the Bildungsroman genre, and how the lead protagonist develops within this
